The Consulate Apartments was designed by Frank Haines of Lemmon Freeth Haines & Jones, for developer Edwin Yee, the largest developer of condominium apartments in Hawaii during the 1960's.

A special mahalo to our sponsor:

In the late 60's, the entire corner @ Punahou Street & Wilder Avenue was developed with mid to high-rise apartment housing.

Docomomo US Hawaii Chapter promotes the study, interpretation and protection of the architecture, landscape and urban design of the Modern Movement. We aim to encourage a sense of regional and national pride for the rich legacy of the Modern Movement within the Pacific Islands.

The charm of San Souci, meaning “without care,” and its long history of hospitable lodgings date back to the late 1800s, with the original hotel immortalized by Robert Louis Stevenson. The crescent-shaped tower is oriented to maximize panoramic ocean views.

Outrigger Canoe Club
2909 Kalakaua Avenue

Originally founded in 1908, the current building is the third, constructed for the club under the direction of Walter McFarlane in 1963. Ossipoff’s signature inside-outside living concept also characterizes the clubhouse.
Established in 1901 in Honolulu, the initial address for the Elks was simply “Hawaii, T.H.” The Elks moved to their present site in 1920 after purchasing the 155,000-square foot Castle estate for $1.00 per square foot. Almost four decades later, the present day Elks Lodge, designed by Bradley and Wong, was constructed.

Castle Surf

2937 Kalakaua Avenue

Architect: Alfred Sturgis
Built: 1966

The James B. Castle mansion, known as Kainalu, once stood where today’s Castle Surf and Elks Club both stand. This six-story condo extends to the ocean and features charming details, such as the sculpture rising up the face of the building.
Developed by Johnson & Perkins and slightly set back from Kalakaua Avenue, the complex was constructed in two increments with the 12-story building getting underway only five months after the 10-story portion.

The Tropic Seas
2943 Kalakaua Avenue
Architect: Johnson & Perkins
Built: 1958

Featuring an open, breezy street front structure, this 16-story building was the last major condominium project constructed on the Gold Coast. The building footprint mirrors the particularly long, narrow site. It bears resemblance to the 10-story apartment located at 3056 Kalakaua Avenue, designed by the same architect.

Diamond Head Beach Hotel & Residences
2947 Kalakaua Avenue
Architect: Jo Paul Rognstad
Built: 1969
Exuding an Asian flair with its butterfly roofs and turquoise bridges and railings, the three-building complex celebrates Hawaii’s multi-cultural traditions. The Ambassador was the first co-op project developed on Oahu with 79 units.

Diamond Head Ambassador
2957 Kalakaua Avenue
Architect: Herbert Beyer
Penthouses: Gordon Bradley
Built: 1956

As the earliest multi-story building in the United States to utilize pre-stressed concrete structural members, interior supporting columns were eliminated allowing greater flexibility for a unit’s floor plan.

<td>Known as the “father of canoe racing,” George David Center was an integral figure at the Outrigger Canoe Club and the Olympic Trials circuit, known for his athleticism and leadership. Built as a three-story apartment, this structure received an addition of three upper floors in 1957.</td>

With a maximum of four units per floor, each running the depth of the building, every apartment has an ocean front lanai. The modest building, built for Mrs. H. Harrison, is rendered in a modern, utilitarian style with an asymmetric façade. Original interior details include Japanese shoji screen doors and built-ins.

The Tahitienne
2999 Kalakaua Avenue

Architect: Hammarbarg & Fraser; Edwin Bauer
Built: 1958

This building was the first major condominium developed by Hal Hansen of Oceanside Properties, one of the most prolific early condo builders who in the ensuing ten years would undertake eight more projects in Honolulu and Lahaina.
Built as a luxury co-op on the island of Oahu, this 14-story building houses only twelve apartments, each over 2,500 square feet. Hawaii was the first state to allow condominiums, and in November 1961 this property became the first apartment complex to take advantage of the new form of ownership.

3019 Kalakaua Avenue
3019 Kalakaua Avenue
Architect: Wimberly and Cook
Built: 1960

Seabreeze Apartments
3065 Kalakaua Avenue
Architect: Takashi Anbe
Built: 1960

This eleven-story gem contains only ten apartments. The inset tile murals that extend from street level to the 11th story on the mauka wall were designed and executed by Isami Enomoto, of Ceramics Hawaii.
With large extended lanai providing shade for units below and recessed pilotis, this 10-story structure appears to float above the street, and contrasts with its smaller, plantation style neighbors. The architect designed other recognizable buildings around Honolulu, including the 1964 Queen Emma Building and the 1982 Century Square Tower located downtown.
